This rather hysterical suggestion is adequately answered by a trade journal of the steel industry which briefly remarks that such machinery would immediately become antiquated: and furthermore that the organization of men to operate the machinery must be built up and cannot be stored.

A more practical and simple suggestion is offered, namely, that in every contract by an American manufacturer with a foreign power there should be a clause canceling the contract in case the plant is needed for war material for ourselves. This rather hysterical suggestion in

The Balance Sheet of Business High has made its first appearance for the year. It contains numerous stories, articles, "locals" and illustrations, most of the last being the work of Vernon One of the editorials which might be of interest to pupils in other schools relates to freshmen entering into the full life of the school. It follows in full life of the school. It follows in part:

"Each and every freshman who enters Business High School should become imbued with the idea of becoming a good citizen. He may begin his good citizenship by educating himself, a work which is in three parts—doing justice to studies, taking part in as many activities as are actually beneficial to himself and to his school and working for the betterment of his school. Now, there is a gate to this road of good citizenship, and we are going to point it out to you, along with some suggestions as to entering—but we leave the latter to your own initiative.

but we leave the latter to your initiative.

"That gate is guarded by the section teacher and by the assembly—or, rather, they are the guides.

"Freshmen, go to your section teacher, and ask her or him to tell you about the studies and the activities. If he or she does his or her duty as a teacher, you will be set right. From your section teacher you can get an idea as to what your studies will be like in the future, and can prepare for them. From your section teacher you will also lean all about the various activities, their relative standings, and the amount of help they may give. Morelean all about the various activities, their relative standings, and the amount of help they may give. Moreover, you are working for the betterment of your school if you refrain from littering it with trash and refuse, and you are working for the betterment of your school if you simply behave yourself."

Charles M. Thomas, teacher of psy-Charles M. Thomas, teacher of psychology and education in the Miner Normal School, Friday afternoon gave the first of a series of monthly demonstrations of the application of scientific measurement to intelligence. The demonstration was given at the Simmons School before teachers of the ungraded schools, under Dr. W. S. Montgomery, supervising principal. He pointed out that children of ungraded schools were backward, atypical, incorrigible or defective from causes which were hereditary, physiological, mental, social or mixed, and that the teachers could do little except in indirect ways by agitating eugenics ideas to correct the first; they could summon medical attendance and nursing while they applied hygiene to the second; could stimulate mental activity by a mixture of kindergarten and vocational activities with a varying amount of instruction in the formal school studies, but that correction of social conditions would depend upon the strong, cultured, sympathetic personality of the teacher who could induce respect, fondness and love.

activities with a varying amount of instruction in the formal school studies, but that correction of social conditions would depend upon the strong, cultured, sympathetic personality of the teacher who could induce respect, fondness and love.

The speaker said that the loose designation of ungraded children must give way to more exact determination of the variation from the normal children of the same age group by measurement in physical conditions, native reactions and intelligence. He demonstrated the difference between the Yerkes-Bridges scale for testing intelligence, recently published, and the former revisions of the Binet-Simon system, as made by Dr. Goddard of Vineland, N. J., and the late Dr. Huey of Johns Hopkins. Application of the scale to the measurement of the children in the ungraded schools will be made at subsequent meetings.

Children who are clearly defective are institutional and not public school problems, he said, and a community owes it to the average child to see that I these designations are recognized and provided for.
